Woodburning truck displayed in energy resources conference

Jim Marks
Kaimin Reporter

A Chevrolet pickup truck converted to run on synthetic gas created by the burning of biomass wood pellets is just one sample of how alternative energy sources can be used in modern technology.

The truck, which is built and owned by Pyreco Inc., was on display as part of the Alternative and Renewable Energy Resources Conference being held through today in the University Center.

The third annual conference is co-sponsored by the Bonneville Power Administration and the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. Individuals and representatives from the government and private companies have been participating in conference workshops, lectures and exhibits since Monday.

Solar, biomass, geothermal, cogeneration, wind and hydro energy sources and products are the six main topics of discussion, said Don Davey, BPA's conference director. The focus of the conference, he said, is products that use these energy sources and their marketing.

"We're looking at what people are experiencing when they bring these things on the line," he said. "They'll have to show that they can produce."

Among the many exhibits in the UC are a water-driven power plant, an active solar water-heating system and many lighted display and information booths and video aids. There are also demonstrations of alternative and renewable energy-using products, including the pellet-driven Chevy pickup.

The workshops and lectures at the conference include discussions of private and public financing of alternative and renewable energy resource products and discussions of the products and their potentials.

Davey said the conference is usually held in larger cities than Missoula. The conference was brought to Missoula this year, he said, because public interest is high and interested people cannot always travel to the conference's meeting place.

Endrin risk is hunters' choice

Jim Marks
Kaimin Reporter

As the best possible decision made from limited data, Montana has given hunters an "either or choice" to hunt waterfowl and game that may be contaminated with endrin.

That was the message given by Bill Thomas, an information officer for Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks Department, to about 300 people at a meeting of the student chapter of the Missoula Wildlife Society last night. Thomas's talk was titled "Endrin and the 1981 waterfowl and big game hunting season in Montana."

Through data that is often incomplete and confused, Thomas said, Montana has decided to open all but eight southeastern Montana counties' hunting seasons on time.

"Experts cannot constitute a danger concerning human health when wildlife are involved," he said. Montana's decision is: "Go ahead, if you choose, sportsmen, shoot and eat the birds but take precautions," he said.

The workshops and lectures, which cost $5 to attend, will continue today until 11:15 a.m. Topics for future conferences will be decided upon by those attending. Following the conference, the BPA and the Montana Department of Natural Resources and Conservation will hold a workshop on micro-hydro power systems. The workshop will begin at 1:30 p.m. and end at 6 p.m. The exhibits and product representatives will also be present at that time to answer any questions.

Endrin is a pesticide that was sprayed on 121,000 acres in eastern Montana. The DDT-related toxin was used to kill army cutworms. Many game animals, especially waterfowl, were found to have dangerous levels of endrin in their body tissues.

Although there are no known cases of endrin application west of the continental divide, migratory birds may travel from the east to the west. Thomas said, however, that eating the waterfowl in western Montana is probably safe.

"In western Montana, I don't believe it is a problem for waterfowl hunters," he said. "I feel a little insecure in advising to hunt waterfowl west of the divide, but there are no known applications of endrin here."

"Sportsmen still have a freedom of choice and we hope they'll have enough information to make a decision."

According to Thomas, the danger of a contaminated bird migrating from eastern to western Montana and being eaten by a western Montana hunter is minimal. Only 2 percent of the birds that do migrate to western Montana are killed and eaten, he said, adding that the rest of the migrating birds "fly by" western Montana.

Calling endrin a "six letter word," he said, "it is acutely, highly toxic. Endrin in parts per million can kill a fish."

He said endrin collects in fatty tissues of the body and has a half life of 10 to 14 years. The Environmental Protection Agency rules that only three parts per million of endrin is acceptable in poultry, he said.

"The chronic, long-term impacts on wildlife are not known," he said. "We have been forced to make advised and considered recommendations."

In order to take precautions against endrin poisoning, Thomas suggests the following: Strip the skin and remove the internal organs. Dispose these things so that they cannot be eaten by another animal. Do not stuff the bird and cook it on a rack, discarding the drippings.

Posters may be coming off, but MX roadshow will go on

Greg Gadberry
Montana Review Editor

Someone apparently doesn't want people to know about the MX roadshow.

About 20 of the 30 to 35 posters announcing the event — a series of panel discussions and speeches which will be held Thursday and Friday about the controversial MX missile system — have reportedly disappeared from campus locations.

Mark Anderlik, a member of the Montana Network for Nuclear Disarmament, said he had no idea where the posters went. But he said they won't be replaced.

"We don't have anymore," he said.

The roadshow is sponsored by Western Action, a group opposed to the construction of the MX missile system. Already, members of the group have sponsored discussions in Nebraska, Nevada and Utah, as well as other cities in Montana. Other groups sponsoring the Missoula roadshow include the Defenders of Wildlife, the Student Action Center and the Headwaters Alliance.

Highlights of the roadshow include:

- A panel discussion on the MX Missile, Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the Missoula City Council Chambers. Panelists include Cecil Garland, former president of the Montana chapter of the Wilderness Society; Janet Gordon, co-director of Citizens Call; and retired Marine Corps Maj. Gen. W.T. Fairborn. The discussion will be broadcast live by KUFM radio.

- A noon forum on the MX Missile held at the University Center on Friday.

- A second panel discussion, held Friday night at 7:30 at the University Center Ballroom.

Is Yee resigning?

Pam Newbern
Kaimin Reporter

The resignation of Albert Yee, dean of the University of Montana School of Education, continues to be a subject of "no comment" responses among faculty and staff at UM.

Neither Yee nor administrators were willing to confirm or deny persistent rumors of Yee's impending resignation.

Lyle Berg, head of the education school's division of educational research and services and assistant to the dean, said that a meeting between the department heads of the School of Education and Academic Vice President Donald Habbe will take place today. The purpose, said Berg, is to "ascertain what is going on in regard to Yee and to find out what all this means."

Habbe refused to comment on Yee or rumors of his resignation. Yee himself refused to comment on rumors that he will shortly resign, but said that the meeting of department heads today is a regular meeting in the School of Education, and that a social event has been planned to follow it.

Lynda Brown, director of Equal Opportunity and Personnel Services, who would process Yee's official resignation if it came about, said that she had heard nothing about Yee resigning.

Sara Steensland, Chairwoman of the department of home economics within the School of Education, said that she had heard nothing about Yee resigning. "I just came from a meeting with him this afternoon," she said yesterday, "and he didn't mention anything about resigning at that time. I would be very surprised to hear of his resignation. I think he's doing a good job."

Since Yee became dean of the school in the fall of 1979, disputes between him and the faculty and staff of the school over committee assignments and general administrative policy have been constant problems.

The problems continued into the spring of 1980, culminating with the resignation of four members of the school's doctoral degree committee. They sent a letter to UM President Richard Bowers stating their displeasure with Yee's leadership.

Then, in May, 1980, 19 of the 29 members of the School of Education voted "no confidence" in Dean Yee's leadership of the education school. Only five faculty members voted confidence in Yee.

Throughout 1980-81, three members of the faculty of the School of Education pursued

School of Ed. schism irreparable; Yee should resign

The rumors, accusations and controversy have swirled around the University of Montana campus for over a year. And now there is some substantial evidence that the rumors are becoming fact. Albert Yee has reportedly been asked to resign his position as dean of the School of Education, and he might be wise to take up the offer.

The past eighteen months have seen relations between Yee and the Education faculty deteriorate badly. In March 1980, four members of the education faculty sent a memo to President Bowers and Academic Vice President Habbe expressing their displeasure in Yee's leadership. June 1980 saw a no-confidence vote in Yee's handling of his duties by the Education faculty.

Yee has been accused of being authoritarian, petty, mistrustful of those working under him, and refusing to keep any lines of communication open between himself and the Education faculty.

But, throughout, Yee has had his supporters who say that he has done his best after inheriting a multitude of problems from previous deans, and has been a strong and effective leader.

But, regardless of that support, the damage has already been done. Yee has essentially lost any effectiveness he retained with the faculty and that effectiveness would be nearly impossible to regain — particularly by a man who has been characterized as unyielding and uncompromising.

No defense has been forthcoming from Yee. He has refused to talk to the Kaimin concerning any portion of the controversy since September 1980.

An irreparable schism has developed between him and the faculty and is threatening his relations with the students and administration. It would be best for all concerned if Yee resigned and started anew elsewhere. Then, and only then, could UM's education department begin to repair itself.

A "nut" responds

Editor: I'm one of the "nuts" spreading environmental propaganda. I've even gone so far as to coordinate Earth First's! upcoming UM appearance. And, I have to admit, I was at the dam cracking at Lake Foul last March.

I suppose my biggest problem is that I love this planet, unmodified and healthy. Clean air appeals to me. So do free-flowing rivers and mountains without oil wells. Endrin "treated" ducks don't sound appetizing. Neither does poisoned wheat.

Earth First! encourages humanity to cooperate with nature, rather than trying to conquer it. Cooperation means allowing the natural processes of certain areas to continue uninterrupted (we call these areas "wilderness.") If you glance at a map of designated wilderness in the United States, you'll see we've committed a very small percentage of land to preservation.

So Severn, if you wish to label me a "nut" or "loonie" for fighting for the planet, that's ok—I've been called worse. In fact, consider this letter as my personal invitation to you to attend the Road Show. As I understand it, you sane people love to watch the nuts carry on. Besides, you might just learn a little about what's happening to our planet from the "environmental propaganda."

Draft counseling is for info only

Editor: The draft counseling office's purpose is to help men between 19 and 26 understand the new Selective Service laws. The office is not here to make decisions for individuals concerning this highly emotional and personal issue, but to give out information that would otherwise be difficult or impossible to obtain concerning registration and the draft.

This office is not a seat of political activism, or a front for military recruitment. All information gathered is to help individuals make their own decisions, and is held in strictest confidence.

My personal beliefs, and experiences are just that, personal, and have no bearing on my function as a counselor.

The draft counseling office is a clearinghouse for up to date information on registration and the draft, no more or less, and our only function is to help individuals on a one to one basis assess his status and the options available to him in light of this information.

Blind faith

Editor: I offer the following response to the Tuesday letter from Severn LaGarde.

Yes, Severn, you have to have a little faith in your government. But blind faith is not good faith. And I agree with you wholeheartedly when you express your anger at those around us who insist on making this a better place to live.

Know the rules

Editor: Many new students at UM this year have just come of drinking age. For these people and the people who have moved here from another state; a few pointers for drinking in Montana bars and taverns.

1. Legal drinking age is 19—be prepared to show a valid Montana ID.

2. Be prepared to pay a cover charge for live music on week-ends.

3. For those on a budget, tap beer and bar stock liquor are your best buys. Prices go up when the live music starts. If you want fancy, blended drinks, go to a fancy, blended bar.

4. Do not hassle the help! The bartenders and barmaids are not there for your entertainment. Know what you want to drink and have your money ready. Tipping ensures good service.

5. All breakage is paid for by you, in the long run, in the form of higher drink prices and cover charge.

6. There is an open container law in Missoula. A $100 fine.

7. Don't litter. Keep Missoula looking good.

8. Do not drive if you are drunk and don't let your friends drive — please.

Always remember: It's a privilege to drink in a Montana bar or tavern, not a right.

More GSL loans requested by students

College Press Service

The rush to apply for Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs) before Oct. 1, when controversial new regulations for qualifying for GSLs go into effect, produced a record number of students seeking aid, and even drained some school treasuries of aid funds before classes began.

Financial aid advisers around the country tried to reach students during the summer to apply for GSLs early to beat the new rules.

Schramm fills legal counsel post temporarily

The University of Montana is now without an official legal counsel. But even if a legal problem should arise, there is no reason for alarm.

The legal counsel position is vacant because George Mitchell, former legal counsel, resigned in July to accept another university position — director of auxiliary services.

According to UM President Neil Bucklew, no acting legal counsel has been appointed, but LeRoy Schramm, acting chief counsel of the Commissioner's Office of Higher Education in Helena, will make regular visits to UM to handle the legal duties.

"Lawsuits don't develop overnight," Bucklew said, "and if the university was to get involved in one, we'd hope to have the legal counsel appointed."

Until then, Bucklew said, Schramm will take over the university's legal problems.

The legal counsel is responsible for UM's daily legal paperwork, interpretation of laws concerning UM and handling of the university's lawsuits.

Bucklew, who will appoint the legal counsel, will accept applications until Oct. 26. In the meantime, Bucklew said, he will select a committee of faculty and administrators to advise him in the selection.

"We want to make the selection as fast as we can," Bucklew said, but added that the selection will take a minimum of six weeks.

The rules include a new "needs test," in which families earning more than $30,000 per year have to demonstrate how much they need the loan to put their children through school.

To evade the new rules, the University of Idaho processed more GSL applications by August 25th than it did during the entire 1980-81 academic year.

The rush got so bad that the North Carolina College Foundation, which administers GSLs in that state, ran out of GSL money the first week of September.

The U.S. Dept. of Education's new rules allow students from families that make less than $30,000 per year to get the maximum $2,500 loan without having to pass the needs test.

The "test" itself is a set of tables laying out what families of different income levels must spend on their children's education from their own pockets before becoming eligible for a loan.

The standard need in the tables is set fairly generously, however. Even those families with incomes over $100,000 may still be eligible, depending on the cost of the school and the number of students in the family.

For example, at some of the more expensive private colleges—where costs can exceed $11,000 per year—loans are available for families with incomes up to $110,000 a year with one student. For families with two students, the income limit goes to $130,000.

Some observers estimate the impact will be greatest on public college students from families in the $30,000 to $45,000 per year range. Public colleges, of course, charge less than private schools. Their costs would represent a smaller percentage of family income, and thus disqualify some families from GSLs.

The needs test, however, is in effect only during the 1981-82 academic year ending June 30. Administration officials have said they hope to extend the test to lower income groups at that time.

Those aren't the only new GSL rules. All grace periods for repayment—with the exception of the first six months after graduation—have been eliminated.

The Department of Education has also increased the minimum annual loan repayment amount from $360 to $600.

Other changes went into effect earlier. As of August, the loan origination fee for GSLs was increased from one percent to five percent of the total amount of the loan.

"But it's tolerable only if it doesn't signal the beginning of a trend," Phillips says.

$100 Pantzer award needs top nominees

Deb Keeley
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The Robert T. Pantzer Award committee is seeking recommendations for this year's recipient.

Any University of Montana student or faculty member or Montana resident "who has contributed substantially to making the University a more open and humane learning environment," according to committee guidelines, is eligible to receive the $100 award.

The award was established in 1974 by the UM Foundation, through contributions, "to honor a former president who is thought to have been deeply concerned with those values," according to Tom Payne, professor of political science and committee chairman.

Students, faculty and area residents are encouraged to send their recommendations to the committee. Payne said all recommendations must be received by a member of the committee by Oct. 10.

"We definitely need all the nominations we can get," Payne said, "especially from students."

The recipient will receive the award at the Alumni Banquet during Homecoming week.

KUFM slates new program

Karen McGrath
Kaimin Reporter

The KUFM Citizen's Advisory Board, an advising council to the University of Montana's public radio station, has received an $8,900 grant from the Montana Committee for the Humanities.

Jyl Hoyt, KUFM's director of news and public affairs, said the grant will be used to create a weekly one-half hour news analysis program, "Montana Week in Review."

The program will feature objective analyses of major issues of the week in Montana from various Montana University System members.

A pool of 15 political scientists, historians, economists and journalists from around the state will participate. The majority of the grant money will be used to pay stipends to the program participants, Hoyt said.

UM political science professor Thomas Payne, who, along with Hoyt, is a director of the KUFM project, said that the original idea for "Montana Week in Review" was based on a similar public radio program in Washington, "Washington Week in Review."

KUFM also ran a similar program during the last legislative session, "Legislative Week in Review." Payne said the legislative program and the new program would be similar in format, but that the new program would focus more closely on fewer issues.

Because the Montana Committee for the Humanities does not fund capital equipment costs, the KUFM advisory board had to purchase a phone hybrid hook-up system for the new program. "In order to purchase the phone hybrid hook-up, we had to go out into the community for funding, and we were successful," Hoyt said.

This phone line connection will enable participants throughout the state to take part in the program during the broadcast.

Contributions for KUFM's new equipment were given by the Lee

Foundation, First National Bank of Missoula, First Bank Western Montana of Missoula and Missoula Liquid Assets Corp.

"Montana Week in Review" will begin airing Oct. 26. The program will continue airing Monday evenings at 5:30 for about seven months, Hoyt said. — KUFM can be heard at 89.1 FM in Missoula.

Campus directories to be released later this fall

Distribution of the 1981-82 campus directories is tentatively planned for early November, according to Publications Editor Bill Brown.

However, he said, it could be as late as Thanksgiving before the books arrive. The distribution date, tentatively set for early November, is contingent on when the tape of registered students is run through the computer system.

Brown hopes to run the tape Oct. 6 in order to meet the tentative distribution date, which will leave about 8 percent of the registered students unaccounted for. He sees no problem in this, as he says the directory will become less accurate at the beginning of Winter Quarter.

Students will receive the directory free this year, compared to the original $1.50 they paid last year. This is due to the way they are being published.

The directories have been completely funded through advertising, which was taken care of by representatives of the publishing company, centered in San Diego.

It is undecided, according to Brown, how off-campus students will receive their directories. Dorms and married student housing will have them delivered to individual rooms.

Fairmont Hot Springs buys into ski area-resort

ANACONDA (AP) — Fairmont Hot Springs Corp. has purchased controlling interest in the Discovery Basin Ski Area west of Anaconda and says it is planning major renovations at both the ski area and the resort between here and Butte.

Fairmont Hot Springs owner Lloyd Wilder bought about 70 percent of the stock in the ski area near Georgetown Lake on U.S. 10-A from private individuals this summer, resort manager LeRoy Mayes said Monday.

He said the corporation is installing $250,000 in snow-making equipment at the ski area and is trying to obtain $16 million to renovate and expand the resort.

Mayes said financing for the resort is "still in the bargaining stage" and may not be concluded this year.

He said the corporation has hired a consultant from a California brokerage firm to put together a proposed loan package that would provide for the addition of a golf pro shop, dining room remodeling and several small shops and boutiques at the resort.

Mayes said the corporation has been trying unsuccessfully for the past four years to put together a remodeling plan but has been unable to attract lenders.

The addition of Discovery Basin to Fairmont Hot Springs gives it "a more universal appeal," Mayes said. The snow-making equipment will be installed by Nov. 1, he said, and the ski area plans to open Thanksgiving weekend.

Also, he said, Discovery Basin will be part of a "Ski The West" promotional campaign and will extend its hours to a seven-day-a-week operation.

Taking house inventory may save money later

Editor's note: This is the second of a six-part series written by ASUM Legal Counsel Manager Bruce Barrett on renting in Missoula.

Obtaining a full refund of your security deposit from a landlord often can be a difficult problem. In recent years this problem has grown due to the increase in the amount of deposits, some of which now are several hundred dollars. The best action a tenant can take in guaranteeing the return of his deposit is to write a detailed inventory of the premises with the landlord when the place is rented.

The main purpose of an inventory is to insure that a tenant will not be charged for damage done prior to his occupancy. Actually, Montana law requires a landlord to provide a tenant with a "statement as to the present condition of the premises." The landlord also is required to list any damages done to the premises by his previous tenant if that damage has not been repaired. A tenant could wait for the landlord to supply the required list. If the list is not supplied, the law makes it more difficult for a landlord to prove that his present tenant actually caused the damage being charged to the deposit, and certainly a landlord who fails to provide such a list is opening up the possibility of his tenant claiming the damages were already there when he moved in. Still, experience at ASUM Legal Services has shown that many problems can be avoided by having a list compiled at the onset.

It is best to walk through the house with the landlord at the beginning of tenancy, and compile the list together. It can be broken down into rooms, with each room described in terms of its floors, walls, ceilings and furnishings. It is important to have a list that goes into detail. Many lists simply described the rooms as good, fair or poor. This is difficult to use as proof if a problem arises later. The list should state in detail the condition of the room including any nail holes, chips in the paint, carpet stains, etc.

Once the list is compiled, it should be dated and signed by both parties, and each should keep a copy of the list. At times additional damage is discovered after the tenant has moved in. This should be added to the list, and the landlord should be notified. This will provide a tenant with proof if charges are made for pre-existing damage.

A list of the condition of the premises can stop dishonest landlords from charging tenant after tenant for the same damage. Usually, however, dishonesty is not the problem. Landlords simply have failed to examine their rental units and often think that the unit is in better shape than it actually is. Starting off your tenancy in a sound, businesslike manner is the smart thing to do, and generally landlords appreciate this kind of attitude from their tenants. If a landlord hesitates or delays compiling the list with you, beware. You may want to look for another place, especially if there are damages. If you still decide to move in, go through and compile the list anyway. Take a neutral party with you, then both sign the list. This list, coupled with the landlord's refusal to make the list with you, will look very good if you find yourself in court.
